Career Resource Guide for Uniformed Services Environmental Health Practitioners

Available Soon—Sign Up for Your Copy Today!

The guide is designed to provide important information to environmental health professionals who are retiring or otherwise leaving active duty service and to encourage those individuals to consider careers working with state and local environmental health programs. It includes information about state and local environmental health structure, requirements for employment, and how to obtain environmental health education, including information about accredited environmental health programs and distance-learning opportunities. Success stories are included from persons who successfully transitioned from the uniformed services to environmental public health at various government levels.

The guide provides answers to frequently asked questions. The three appendices include information about organizations interested in hiring former uniformed services environmental health practitioners when vacancies are available.
