With regard to removing any warning about titanium dioxide having carcinogenic properties: either it does, or it doesn't, and we rely on your agency to be straight shooters. If you are proposing a trade-off in the form of removing the warning in exchange for allowing publication of the document, then I request that you don't do it. First of all, it's simply not right. Secondly, when I make recommendations for exposure controls to employers and tell them that the exposure in question may be carcinogenic, they take my advice more seriously.
