Do you have health symptoms that could be related to your 9/11 exposure?

Members enrolled as either a Survivor or a Responder in the World Trade Center
(WTC) Health Program may receive medical monitoring and treatment for certified WTC-related health conditions at no out-of-pocket cost.

Certified Conditions

What is a certified condition?

A certified WTC-related health condition is a diagnosed condition that is approved for coverage by the WTC Health Program. The Program certifies WTC-related health conditions that are in 5 main categories:

Acute
Traumatic Injuries

Musculoskeletal Disorders
(Responders only)

Airway/Digestive Disorders

Cancer

Mental Health

The health condition must meet the Program criteria to be considered for certification.

WTC Health Program Certification Criteria

How does a condition get certified?

Step 1: Members receive a medical examination by a WTC Health Program Participating Provider. These examinations, often called initial health evaluation or annual monitoring exams, are covered for eligible members.

Step 2: If the participating provider finds a potential WTC-related health condition, they may submit a certification request to the Program if all Program criteria are met.

Step 3: The Program reviews the request and makes a certification decision. Members are then notified about the certification decision.
