IDEAS FOR PARENTS

Food Marketing in Schools
How Can You Help?

Children and adolescents learn about healthy eating at school, and it is important that they get consistent messages about healthy eating throughout the school campus.1,2 Marketing and advertising of unhealthy foods and beverages sends mixed messages to students about healthy eating.2 Schools can help encourage students to eat healthy foods and beverages by making them available whenever food is offered or sold, using posters and signs to promote them, and serving meals and snacks that are appealing to students.1

Knowing the answers to the following questions can help you support healthy food marketing and promotion in your child’s school. If you don’t know the answers to these questions, check out the school handbook or school website, attend a school wellness meeting or Parent-Teacher Association (PTA) meeting, or simply ask your child’s teacher.

1. Does the school district or school have policies or practices related to marketing and advertising on school grounds?

2. How does the school promote healthy foods and beverages? Are there posters, signage, or images promoting healthy foods and beverages (e.g., low-fat milk, water)?

3. Does the school do student surveys and provide taste-testing opportunities to guide the development of school meal menus?

4. Are there opportunities for parents to help promote healthy foods and beverages?

5. Do classroom teachers use food or coupons for specific foods or restaurants as student rewards?
You can be involved in your child’s school by attending meetings, workshops, or training events offered by the school; communicating with school staff and other parents; volunteering for school events or in your child’s classroom; reinforcing healthy messages and practices your child learns at school; helping make decisions about health in the school; and being part of community activities supported by the school. Here are some specific ideas for how you can support your child’s school in providing healthy food marketing and promotion.

- E-mail or discuss with other parents the importance of having consistent messages about healthy foods and beverages within the school.
- Look for opportunities to get involved with promoting healthy foods and beverages (e.g., organize a group to paint a mural in the cafeteria, or do taste tests with students).
- Join the school or district committee (e.g., wellness committee) that sets the policies for health and wellness, and work to include language about food and beverage marketing in these policies.1,3,4
- Consider assessing current food marketing practices. The results can help guide policy changes.5

Check out additional resources for parents related to the school nutrition environment and services, physical education and physical activity, and managing chronic health conditions at http://www.cdc.gov/healthyschools/P4HS.htm.

REFERENCES