

This new policy reduced barriers to women receiving life-saving treatment for their HIV infection. It improved every mother's access to treatment, it saved mothers' lives, it prevented their babies from becoming infected and it stopped the spread of HIV to uninfected partners. These are critical steps toward the goal of an AIDS-free generation.