

Shanna Cox, MSPH

Health Scientist, Division of Reproductive Health,
National Center for Chronic Disease Prevention and Health Promotion

Shanna Cox, MSPH, is a health scientist in the Division of Reproductive Health. She serves as the Deputy Associate Director of Science and is responsible for the managing, monitoring and evaluating the impact of the Division's scientific portfolio. Ms. Cox has published extensively on a wide range of topics including adolescent health, preconception care and health care services research.

Ms. Cox earned her masters of public health degree at Emory University.

