My father, _____, worked for IBM for _____ years. He started as a _____ and I recall his stories of the tools being dipped in open vats of chemicals for plating, and the smell was very bad and not much ventilation in the area. I believe it was building 18.

He retired around _____. He developed an extremely rare and deadly form of _____, called _____, and died within 6 weeks of diagnosis. Oddly enough, another area man also died from this "rare" _____ after working at IBM his entire life. My dad knew his disease was caused by the chemicals he was around every day. He even called several high ranking IBM officials at the time, asking if there was any research, etc. on the chemicals used, that might help find a way to combat his condition.

It's hard for me to tell whether or not he would be included in this study, but I would definitely offer you any information you need to be able to include his case in the statistics. I can also get information on the gentleman with the same type of _____ as his family is also anxious to have his case included.

I'm not sure if I am writing to the correct person but if not, I'd appreciate it if you can give me some direction on how to have these cases included in the study.

Thank you for your time,
