They stored containers of uranium in the Baker Bros. Grinding Room. The rods/ slugs storing them for days and even weeks (as well as in other rooms) until eventually they were shipped. This went on for the duration of the project. I wore a mask of some sort 'work clothes'.

They didn't seem to have much if any precaution in their protection and monitoring constant exposure to the uranium. Was a hood working.

Private person who never complained about duties and wouldn't discuss his concerns with much and main maintained it until after World War II was over.

Only then talked briefly of how was hired to monitor the containers of uranium for our war efforts. Continued to work in that area until the company closed in 1970.
