Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's Office on Smoking and Health (CDC/OSH)

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) is the lead federal agency for protecting the health and safety of all U.S. citizens at home and abroad, for providing credible information to enhance health decisions, and for promoting health through strong partnerships. CDC develops and implements disease prevention and control, environmental health, and health promotion and education activities to improve the public's health.

The Office on Smoking and Health (OSH) is a division of the National Center for Chronic Disease Prevention and Health Promotion (NCCDPHP), one of the centers within the CDC. OSH is responsible for leading and coordinating strategic efforts to prevent tobacco use among youth, to promote smoking cessation, and to protect nonsmokers from secondhand tobacco smoke. OSH's Web site, the Tobacco Information and Prevention Source (TIPS), provides a range of materials on tobacco control and prevention.
