

World AIDS Day 2021

Mark K.: I'm Mark, a long-term survivor and writer living in Baltimore. And for World AIDS Day this year, I'm going to keep in mind that there are people right now, coming of age—they don't know what HIV is. They don't know how it's transmitted. And also right now, there are people receiving an HIV diagnosis who don't know anything about HIV treatment or the services available to them. So I'm going to use my voice and my action to make sure that we continue to educate. That we don't take anything—or anyone—for granted.
